

Around the World with XL Vets

Members of the XLVet community, a collaborative group of independent farm, equine and small animal veterinary practices across the UK, have raised over £35,000 in a recent charity challenge to travel the world without an engine.

To mark the 10th anniversary of XLVets, all 53 member practices together travelled a total of 34,727 miles to complete the challenge, the equivalent of almost one and a half times around the world, by running, kayaking, swimming, cycling and walking their way throughout the UK, says event organiser, Jane Simpson.

Alex Cooper of Pembrokeshire based Fenton Vets, raised the most, totalling £1,966.04, whilst his practice also clocked up the furthest distance, travelling 4,516 miles. "The day took some coordinating with a horsebox carrying bikes and kayaks," says Alex. "The enthusiasm created amongst the team meant it became the talking point within the practice for weeks. We have already decided that it will become an annual event with invites extended to clients as well as all XLVets member practices," he adds.

The money raised has been split between member practices' local chosen charities and Send a Cow, which will receive a cheque for £15, 571," says Jane Simpson.

Jane Simpson adds: "The XLVets practices have shown how independent practices can work together to achieve amazing results. The generosity of all those that have supported our efforts will make a real difference to the charities. It's a great achievement and I am sure that the resourceful and competitive nature of all of our members will mean that our fundraising efforts will not stop here."
